Decatur Woman Named New Head of DOGE, Noted for Lifetime Record of Eliminating Waste

Washington, DC - According to the President, the new appointee built her reputation not through public office, but through decades of private-sector efficiency inside her own home, where no usable item was ever discarded without a thorough evaluation.

"She doesn't throw things away," Trump said. "She re-purposes. She does. She truly does. Shes does it in such a beautiful way."

Officials say the new DOGE head has already suggested that every federal department be equipped with a deep freezer to ensure no usable food is discarded.

While she has not issued a public statement, those familiar with her approach say she considers throwing away food before every last morsel is consumed to be less of a policy failure and more of a personal one.
